future proved, declined to consider a sale. Now they manufacture this product in many foreign countries, as well as at home.

We had a 7-1/2 hour flight to Idlewild, where we waited two hours, before departing for Washington.

It was good to be home again. We found Sasha there, on holiday from St. Timothy's. The garden is, of course, still unfinished, with slabs of stone, brick, shrubs and trees lying or standing about.

April 21, 1962 - Saturday

We had a lazy day, seeing friends, and enjoying the house.

April 22, 1962 - Sunday

An 80° temperature was predicted for today. E, Sasha and I went to St. John's Church, Georgetown, for the Easter service. Afterwards, Betsy and Bill Tyler came to see us. I had lunch sent from the Metropolitan Club--the crab Maryland was delicious.

This afternoon we walked in the exquisite Dumbarton Oaks garden. We saw the construction under way for the two new pavilions to house a library, and the Bliss collection of pre-Colombian objects, an imaginative venture for a couple in their eighties. Thence we went for tea with Mildred Bliss. She was calm, collected, and as enchanting as ever, despite her great misfortune. (Bob Bliss's death). Friends drifted in and out.

April 23, 1. 2 - Monday

At office this morning. Easter Monday is not an American holiday, as it is in England. I saw quantities of officials, including Julius Holmes, back from Iran.

E and I lunched with Kay Halle. Her brother Walter, his wife, and Bob Hooker were there. We batted on Susan's delicacies.
